WILD FOOD IS HEALTHY

Wild food has sustained human life and culture spanning ancient and modern hunting eras for 60,000 years. Hunting to gather wild food led to sustainable communities, early farming systems, early tourism development, and community resilience during periods of farming shortfall and depression.

Today, hunting wild food remains a choice to source affordable, nutritious, free range, organic food.

The physical activity to harvest wild food creates a healthy lifestyle in the outdoors.

Time spent in the outdoors connects hunters to nature, which sustains mental health and wellbeing.

Connecting to nature leads to conservation of nature by the hunting community.

The gathering of friends, families, and communities to hunt and celebrate the wild food gathered, is a healthy sustainable way of life.

Conclusively — wild food is healthy.

Good afternoon Mr Koutsantonis

I hope my email finds you safe and well.

Just recently I was at a function with the Premier and was discussing some issues concerning our association namely being CHASA.

As you are aware CHASA is a Conservation & Hunting association representing some 25 other Conservation & Hunting organisations in South Australia.

I have requested that I would like to have a meeting with the Premier and yourself even if being a quick coffee or even lunch across the road at Parliamentos restaurant, the Premier was fine with this arrangement but requested that I speak with you to arrange this meeting.

Mr Koutsantonis would it be timely possible that we have this appointment this week as I have a meeting with the CHASA board on May the 26th 2022.

Thanking in advance and I await your reply.

Regards
